

Ohio Revised Code

Section 2307.74 Product defective in manufacture or construction.

Effective: January 5, 1988

Legislation: House Bill 1 - 117th General Assembly

A product is defective in manufacture or construction if, when it left the control of its manufacturer, it deviated in a material way from the design specifications, formula, or performance standards of the manufacturer, or from otherwise identical units manufactured to the same design specifications, formula, or performance standards. A product may be defective in manufacture or construction as described in this section even though its manufacturer exercised all possible care in its manufacture or construction.
